

A father was facing his last days of life on this earth with his two sons at his side. He turned to the oldest son John and said, "John, I know you have not been going to church and not reading your Bible. It won't be long before I die and go to be with Jesus. Will you promise to start reading your Bible and going to worship again after I die?" John looked at his father with anger in his eyes and said, "Dad, you never stop preaching at me, do you?" The father's face became sad and tears well up in his eyes.

Then the father turned to his younger son Dan. "Dan, I know you have not been going to church and reading your Bible. It won't be long before I die and to heaven to be with Jesus. Will you promise to start reading your Bible and going to worship after I die?" Dan, looked at his Dad and smiled and said, "Sure, Dad, I promise you with all my heart." The dad smiled.

Well, Dad passed away. Something happened to John. He remembered the tears in his dad's eyes, and he started reading the Bible again the way he did when he was younger. He started going to church and never missed a Sunday as he was drawn close to the Savior he once cherished and loved.

Dan never did keep his promise to his dying father. He had good intentions, but never opened his Bible to start reading, and never made it to worship, and soon forgot the promise made to his father. It has been said, "The road to hell is paved with good intentions."

Jesus told us this story about two sons when he was close to the shameful death on the cross. The one son said "No" but then changed his mind and did the work his father asked of him. The other son said "Yes" but then did not go into the vineyard to do the work his father asked of him. Jesus used this story or parable about the kingdom of God to illustrate how repentance works in the lives of people. Some say "No" at first, but then listen to what the Lord tells them about being saved through Jesus. Others say "Yes" at first and even show interest, but with the passing of time they resist and say "No" to the life saving message of the gospel. Let's take a closer look at, "Saying Yes To God!"

There is no doubt as to how the one son feels about his father's request to go and work in the vineyard. He is brutally honest with his dad as he says, "I will not." Children can be very ungrateful to their parents. Parents provide them with tasty food, nice clothing, a cozy home in which to live, and lots of extras. Children should be happy to do chores around the house including cleaning their room, helping with the dishes, or mowing the lawn. How often don't parents hear children say these same words today, "I will not!" and "I don't want to" or "It is not my turn!"

Something similar happened with the people that Jesus talked to every day. He told them how he was the Good Shepherd who would die for the sheep, and how he was the Son of God. He talked to them about his heavenly Father's plan to rescue them with such simple words as "God so loved the world he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believes in him should not perish but have everlasting life." He talked to people and they said, "We don't want what you are telling us. We don't want to change our ways. We hate what you have to offer us." He once said of the people of Jerusalem, "O Jerusalem, Jerusalem, I would have gathered you together as a hen gathers her chickens under her wings and you would not!"

Years ago, a farmer in the Great Plains watched in horror as prairie re swept across his farm and destroyed his crops. His house and buildings were spared, but the crops were lost. As he walked across the blackened field, he noticed one of the chickens lying on the ground, dead with its feathers scorched. He kicked the dead bird, and out from under it ran several chicks that had been spared from the re by the mother hen who gave her life for her little ones who would never be able to escape the fire. That is what Jesus wanted for the people in Jerusalem, but they would not come.

Then something happened to that first son who said “No” at first. Maybe he thought about how mean he was to his father and changed his mind and said to himself, “Yes, I am going to work for my dad in the vineyard.” Something similar happened to the tax collectors and prostitutes. These egregious sinners said “No” at first, but as the love of Jesus changed their hearts they gladly were led by the Holy Spirit into the kingdom of God. Jesus said, “I tell you the truth, the tax collectors and prostitutes are entering the kingdom of God ahead of you.” Remember the lost or prodigal son who went off to a far country and squandered his inheritance in wild living. It says, “When he came to his senses, he said, ‘I will set out and back to my father and say to him: Father I have sinned against heaven and against you. I am no longer worth to be called you son.’” Jesus was always reaching out to people, working with them, teaching them and telling them stories to lead them to repentance, away from trusting in themselves for their salvation, and trusting entirely in him.

What is repentance? Literally the word means that we change our minds. Our natural reaction to God’s warning about sin and its consequences is to laugh and ridicule God or his messengers as the people did at the time of Noah before the great world flood. When Jesus told Nicodemus that he needed to be born again, he made fun of Jesus by saying, “You mean I need to go back up into my mother’s womb and be born again.” People walked away from Jesus when he warned them about loving riches more than the Lord. People walked away from him and hated him when he proclaimed he was the Son of God. Even the immoral women and tax collectors hated Jesus at first, but then their hearts were changed by the words Jesus spoke to them and the love he showed to them. They were led by God’s grace to say “Yes” to the blessings of the kingdom of God, this tremendous undeserved love that Jesus had for them.

Let me illustrate what repentance is with a story about an amazing rescue from a burning building in Detroit. About 25 years ago there was a fire in an old apartment complex in downtown Detroit. The people were trapped in their rooms. Because the alley was too narrow for the hook and ladder, the firemen had to set up a large inflatable air cushion that people jumped into to be saved from the flames. All jumped except for a 15 year old girl who was afraid to jump because she was blind. She did not trust the voices of the people calling out to here to jump straight down and she would be safe. But then her father came running home from work. He called out to his daughter to jump. At first she refused but then she listened to the voice of her father. I have known people who said “No” to what God offers them here in his word but then their hearts were changed. Maybe you know of someone who stubbornly refused to listen God’s Word, but then the voice of the heavenly Father reached into their hearts, changed them and led them to say yes to what our Father offers us in Jesus his Son. The other son said “yes” and changed his answer to “no”

Jesus experienced this over and over again in his ministry. People came to him in large numbers, interested in what he had to say, and interested in seeing his miracles, and interested in his potential to build a kingdom of glory on this earth. They listened, even nodded their heads, but when he talked about things that really mattered such as entering the kingdom of God and being spared from eternal destruction, they walked away in large numbers. The Chief Priests and Elders were the son who at first said “yes” to working in the vineyard but then never went. They had said “yes” to God by taking on positions of leadership in the religious community, promising to teach God’s Word and live by it but they didn’t follow through with these things. Their promises had been nothing more than empty words and therefore they were not doing the Father’s will.

Which son are we? Is our life one of empty words or repentant actions? Are we like the sixth-grader who was so nervous for her science test that she said “no” to God when she sketched a cheat-sheet on the palm of her hand but then in an act of repentance said “yes” when she wiped her hand clean before the test? Or are we like the confirmand who said “yes” to God when he promises to be faithful in hearing God’s Word, using the Sacrament, and serving in the church but then says “no” as the confirmand gets into high school and college and drifts away from regular church attendance? The truth is we are like both sons. We have all said “no” to God and then later repented and did what God wanted us to do. We’ve also sinned by saying “yes” to the Lord when we promise here to reflect God’s holiness but then seconds after worship is over we bicker over that Village driver that cuts us off on the way home, showing God we really meant “no.”

Jesus did not tell this parable to shame us. He told this parable to direct us...to him – the perfect Son. You see Jesus was the third son, not mentioned in the parable. When his heavenly Father said: “Son, I have a very hard chore for you. I want you to save sinful people. You’ll need you to go work on earth. You’ll need to take on flesh and blood spending nine months in a woman’s womb and then be born in a barn. You’ll need to live with these sinful people – healing and teaching them. In return you’ll be mocked, beaten with whips, and finally crucified. Will you do it?” God’s Son, of course, said: “Yes. I will do everything you ask of me.” There was no arguing, no complaining, only complete submission. And Jesus didn’t just say “yes” he lived his “yes” in perfect obedience never veering from the mission. And because Jesus has completed his mission of saving sinners, whenever we say “no” to God, he hears “yes” because he hears his Son’s voice over ours. And whenever we say “yes” only to show we really mean “no” by our inaction, the Father sees his Son’s perfect life in place of ours. In Jesus we have complete forgiveness.

Of course those who know and believe they have been forgiven will reflect their thankfulness for that forgiveness in the way they live. We will no longer say “no” when God tells us to work in his vineyard whether that’s by serving him in the church or reflecting his love at home and at school. Nor will we say “yes” and then make excuses as to why we didn’t follow through with the Lord’s work. As brothers and sisters of Jesus we will say “yes” and we will show “yes.” To strive for anything less would be to say that we don’t care what Jesus has done for us and that we don’t want to be part of God’s family. May that never be said of us. Instead may it be said that we do the Father’s will – not with empty words, but with repentant actions motivated by Jesus’ “yes” for us.
